

Jean Monnet Project

Energy Policy Workshop

About the project

This project intends to provide readily available materials on EU energy security concerns, the role of Russia and lessons for Australia.

It will present this evidence in an accessible format to policymakers, and spread the dissemination of this evidence through European networks, while also focusing on identifying key gaps in current knowledge.

This project will also enhance the reputation of the ANU Centre for European Studies for policy impact and influence in relation to Russian policy studies.

Intended project outcomes

- > Provide clear readily available materials on EU energy security concerns, as well as lessons for Australia;
- > Spread the dissemination of this evidence through European networks, focusing on identifying key gaps in current knowledge; and
- > Enhance the ANUCES's reputation for policy impact and influence in relation to Russian studies.
- > A Background Paper collating and assessing existing knowledge on EU energy security concerns and the potential Russia challenge to a common energy market. To be completed by the EPW Postdoctoral Fellow.
- > A Policy Brief paper disseminating the shared challenge energy security poses to Europe and Australia. To be completed by key international energy security experts and shared widely on social media.
- > A Policy Workshop in Canberra, featuring six international energy experts with participation from Australian academics from a range of disciplines (including: area studies, strategic studies, resource economics) and Australian policy makers from government departments.
- > A Public Forum in Canberra, following the EPW, to disseminate the workshop findings to a broader range of policy makers and to members of the diplomatic community, graduate students, emerging security studies scholars and the public.
- > A peer reviewed journal article written by key scholars at the workshop on cross-country cooperation on Russia's foreign energy strategy towards the European and Australian energy markets.
