Thousands gather at 'Czech Republic First' rally over energy crisis

Around 70,000 demonstrators demand new gas deal with Russia and end to sanctions over war in Ukraine

The Czech Republic is facing an autumn of discontent after an estimated 70,000 demonstrators gathered in Prague to protest at soaring energy bills and demand an end to sanctions against Russia over the war in Ukraine.

Far-right and extreme-left elements coalesced at a "Czech Republic First" rally to call for a new agreement with Moscow over gas supplies and a halt to the sending of arms to Ukraine, while urging the centre-right government of the prime minister, Petr Fiala, to resign.

The demonstration in Wenceslas Square – historically a site of mass dissent in the Czech capital, Prague – appeared to spell an end to a relatively placid period of domestic politics since Fiala took office last December.

On the demarche to the ambassadors of Germany, Denmark and Sweden in connection with the Nord Stream sabotage investigation

Russian Foreign Ministry - МИД России 🧿 за . @

I metal in the past few days, the heads of the German, Danish and Swedish diplomatic missions in Moscow were summoned to the Foreign Ministry, and its officials expressed dismay in connection with the absence of an official response to the October 5, 2022 appeal from Prime Minister of the Russian Federation Mikhail Mishustin to the leadership of these countries on involving representatives of Russian competent agencies and Gazprom in the joint investigation, conducted by Berlin, Copenhagen and Stockholm, of the September 26-27, 2022 acts of sabotage at the Nord Stream 1 and Nord Stream 2 gas pipelines. At the same time, the media reports that other countries, including the United States, are involved in the investigation.

It was noted that if Russian experts are not allowed to take part in the ongoing investigation, Moscow will assume that the above-mentioned countries have something to hide or that they are covering up the perpetrators of these terrorist attacks. Certainly, Russia will not recognise any pseudo-results of this investigation, unless Russian specialists take part.

traditions, culture, values, and also to promote pro-Russian sentiment," he told Four Corners.

"So our job as Russian patriots ... is to be mobilised and be active in defending Russia.

"We believe that it's not enough just to be Russian, you must support Russia."

In 2018, Mr Boikov was referring to Australia when he told a Russian media outlet that "we have a unique opportunity to support Russia from within an enemy state".

He said Cossacks in Australia could "pursue a pro-Russian position, lobby politicians and members of parliament, oppose anyone who lies about Russia, attacks Russia or imposes sanctions. Basically, they can wage an information war."

Clive Palmer's mammoth campaign spend of close to $100m has failed to deliver his party results, with its primary vote failing to reach 5% across the country.

In both regional and metropolitan areas, the United Australia vote increased slightly to about 4.7%, and was strongest in Queensland where it polled close to 6%.

But as expected, the party did well in outer suburban areas that were hit particularly hard by the pandemic, with it polling about 10% in the seats of
